GIVING DUE HONOR: ACCOLADES FOR STUDENTS AND GRADS

Carla Clark Peters, '95 public relations journalism grad, was recently awarded a President's Council for Integrity and Efficiency Award for Excellence in Audit for an audit she led titled "Combined DNA Index System Operational and Laboratory Vulnerabilities." The award recognized Carla's work evaluating possible weaknesses in the FBI's Combined DNA Index System.

Lisa Sain Odom, '98 voice performance grad, was selected to be one of 12 interns in last summer's National Association of Teachers of Singing Intern Program. She was also chosen to participate in the American Institute of Musical Studies in Graz, Austria.

Stephen Garrison, '06 cinema and video production grad, won the top honor for his documentary "Looking Down on Shoes" at the Broadcast Education Association's Regional Awards.

Doug Winningham, '04 cinema and video production grad, won a CINE Golden Eagle in the student division for his film "Empathy." Christopher Zydowicz (cinema faculty), Elisheba Monte ('05 grad) and Melissa Strong ('06 grad) were also honored with CINE Golden Eagles for their support roles.

Several students won awards at the National Broadcast Intercollegiate Competition. Kathryn Boole, Ben Blanton, Melissa Burgdorf, Jacqueline Neill, Ben Abrams, Mallorie Hutchison, Jonny Gamet and Islande Petit-Frere won second place in the TV Studio Production category for a November 2006 version of WBJU-TV News, a 10-minute live-to-tape, student-produced national and international news program. Jack London, a junior radio and TV broadcasting major, won two awards in the TV Commercial category: second place for the 30-second ad "WBJU-FM Promo" and third place for "Extended Education," promoting BJU's Office of Extended Education. Lindsey Geer, '07 radio and TV broadcasting grad, received third place in the TV Field Production category for "123 Degrees," a pilot program illustrating different majors at BJU.

Into All the World

BJU Summer Mission Teams

When the final "amen" is said at the end of each school year, the BJU family scatters to the ends of the earth—literally. Every summer, about 150 students travel on BJU's international mission teams, and several missions majors do internships in various countries as a requirement of their academic program.

BJU's 13 faculty-led summer mission teams are an extension of BJU's mission to develop Christlike character in students, says Mr. Mark Vowels, director of missions. "I tell all the team leaders, 'You should be accomplishing something for the missionary, but you should also be discipling your students. When you get them out in another culture, and everything that's normal for them starts unraveling, that's when you can really disciple them. That's when who they really are comes to the surface.'"

Some of BJU's mission teams travel every year and some every other year; nine are traveling this summer. Teams are on the field for three to 10 weeks in the summer, but preparation begins the October before with a missions emphasis chapel and informational meetings. Students in all majors are encouraged to attend the meetings and consider whether God wants them to join a team. Throughout the school year, team leaders meet with the students who have committed to their teams, and some teams travel to area churches to hold deputation services in the spring. Students can earn academic credit for being team members.

Depending on the country and the missionaries' needs, teams may run Bible clubs, distribute Christian literature, present concerts, teach English, do construction projects or work at camps, among other activities. Team members also minister to the missionaries simply through conversation—providing Christian fellowship and encouragement and in some cases becoming like big brothers and sisters to missionary kids.

When '04 grad Heather Davis was a teenage missionary kid in Germany, she and her siblings looked forward to summer visits from BJU mission teams, including the German team and the Musical Mission Team. "It was the highlight of our summer," she says. "As an MK, it was special and encouraging to spend time with people near my age." Over the years, the Sunday when the Musical Mission Team comes to her church has become the day when more visitors attend than any other Sunday of the year, giving the church contact with many people who wouldn't normally come. Now a residence hall supervisor at BJU, Heather is traveling as an MMT member herself this summer. Her German-speaking skills will be put to good use as the team spends several weeks in Germany and Switzerland, among other European countries.

Whatever activities they involve, mission teams tend to stretch students out of their comfort zones. Mr. Vowels recalls a team he led to the Philippines, in which he required all of the guys—including a computer science major and a business major—to preach despite their inexperience. After the computer science major taught Sunday school, preached and sang a special for a jungle service, he came back and asked, "When can I preach again?" In these and other ways, students on teams learn that the Lord can use them in ways they don't expect.

Financial concerns may deter some from considering a mission team, and Mr. Vowels understands. "I don't encourage students to be reckless," he says. "There's a balance between being reckless and exercising faith. If a student's primary calling at this point in life is to get his degree, we don't want a mission team to be an obstacle to that. But if a student is not in debt and is just a little concerned, I would encourage him to trust the Lord and pursue the team as far as the Lord seems to allow him to go. Again and again, I've seen the Lord provide unexpected income or some special gift that enabled a student to stay in school."

Besides the students who travel on official BJU teams, approximately 200 more go on mission trips through other organizations or local churches, and some arrange their own small teams or travel alone to visit and assist missionaries. All told, BJU students, faculty and staff obey the Great Commission in about 60 to 70 countries every year, doing missions work on every continent but Antarctica.

Missions: "Living a real Christian life"

Missions is for every Christian. Despite sharing a name with a legendary missionary explorer, David (Livingstone) Woodworth was not a missions major; he was a humanities major and now teaches in BJU's history department as a graduate assistant. Dave traveled on the 2004 Australia team and the 2005 United Kingdom team, however, and is traveling around Europe with the Musical Mission Team this summer.

"Not everyone is going to be called to the mission field," Dave acknowledges. "But by going on a short-term team, you get a chance to see what God is doing worldwide and how you fit into that. You see what the Lord can do with your life even if you're not a Bible major or a Christian missions major—because no matter your occupation, if you're a Christian, your life's goal is to be a missionary."

Dave says his foreign missions experiences have informed his history teaching, helped him make his classes more exciting, and enabled him to tell his students about what God is doing in other parts of the world. They have also allowed him to see firsthand what missions really is. "We have this glorified idea of the romantic missionary, but missions anywhere comes down to living a Christian life in front of other people."

Missions: "Of God and not of us"

Melissa Rote, a 2007 Christian missions grad, describes her 11-week missions internship in Bolivia last summer as "intense" but nonetheless the highlight of her missions program at BJU. "You learn all this stuff in class, but the internship requires you to go to the field and put it into practice while it's still fresh in your mind. I could hear Mr. Vowels' voice in my head, especially saying, 'Be a learner.'"

Along with Adriana Gil Ramirez (another 2007 Christian missions grad doing her 2006 internship), Melissa worked with American missionaries but lived with a national missionary family, allowing immersion in the Spanish language and Bolivian culture. "The first time I taught in Spanish for Bible club, I felt like I was doing an awful job of teaching," she says. "I was just reading a script, and I said, 'Lord, this is not how I teach kids, but it's the best I can do!' But two kids got saved. Talk about the power being of Christ and not of us! I wasn't meeting my personal standards of good teaching. It was just the Lord working as His Word went forth."

Melissa hopes eventually to serve as a missionary in Latin America. ■

Sarah McCall
B.S., elementary education
Littleton, Colo.

God is able to do far more than I could ever ask or think. During my four years at BJU, the Lord has proven that He is able to accomplish the work that He began in me. The ministry opportunities He has brought to me have created in me a deep desire to walk with God and be a part of His work. I will probably never have so many learning environments as I have had over the last four years. Working at Camp Spearhead, a camp for young people and adults with disabilities, has opened my heart to loving all people and finding great joy in every minute of life. The ministry at Clemson University has strengthened my faith in God as the Savior of man, even those in my generation. From a nursing home to a Bible club to a girls' home and even a summer in Africa, the Lord has drawn me to Himself through sharing His love with others. I cannot help but wonder what the Lord is preparing me for. I praise Him for a school with so many different opportunities to know God and to make Him known!

Dalila Nieves
B.S., early childhood education
Ocala, Fla.

I came to BJU to fulfill the desire that God gave me when I was young—to teach young children. At BJU, He gave me numerous opportunities to interact with children through both required class activities such as a practicum experience and outside-class opportunities through community outreaches. Another great blessing that God provides at BJU is the assistance of the faculty. There were many occasions when I needed guidance for dealing with specific children's needs. The experienced faculty members gave their time even on Saturdays to provide effective suggestions. When there were full-day workshops in the area to enhance our teaching strategies, the faculty members encouraged us to attend and provided transportation. As I look toward the future ministries that God may have for me, I am thankful for the academic quality and spiritual preparation He provided for me through BJU.

Lena Emelyanova
M.Ed., secondary education
Blagoveschensk, Russia

I am taking with me many great memories about BJU, but one of them stands out the most. It is the memory of many messages, sermons and challenges that boldly reminded me of the purpose of my existence. The Lord calls each of us to "declare His glory among the heathen, his wonders among all people." As an international student who found Christ through the ministry of a faithful missionary couple from the United States, I praise the Lord for the faithful servants at BJU who preach, teach, encourage and labor to fulfill the Great Commission. As I leave BJU, my prayer will be that more students, faculty and staff will be concerned with declaring God's glory in Greenville, in other parts of the United States, and in the uttermost parts of the world.

Theon Hill
B.A., Bible
Plainfield, Ill.

At BJU, I have one thing in common with the majority of people, and that's a relationship with Christ. Having come from Chicago, I faced a cultural divide when I came to BJU. The people talked differently, dressed differently and had different interests than what I was used to. But through these uncomfortable differences, the Lord taught me how to relate to people from a variety of backgrounds, which is very important in the ministry, and how to start with common ground before worrying about differences. I've also been grateful for the student life opportunities here, such as serving on Student Body Council, where I've learned a lot about servant-minded leadership.

Jay Cross
B.A., Christian missions
Windermere, Fla.

God has greatly used the ministry of BJU in my life. Since the seventh grade, I have felt God calling me to be a missionary in South America. During my time here at BJU, God has allowed me to go with the BJU Spanish mission team to Panama and Puerto Rico as well as to travel to Peru for my missions internship. On these trips, God confirmed my call to missions and allowed me to learn many things about Him and about missions that will help me as a missionary in the future. Through these experiences, I have clearly seen God's faithfulness to me. He has always provided more than enough funds to go on my trips, wonderful examples to learn from on the mission field, and many opportunities of spiritual growth. What a privilege it is to serve an almighty, sovereign God! ■

Consider YOUR CALLING

Choosing a major at BJU can be overwhelming, even daunting, especially with more than 100 choices. Of course, the most important factor to consider is God's plan. In each issue, we'll give some real-life examples of how students chose their majors and how grads are using the talents God has given them to do what He has called them to do. They have "considered their calling."

Field: Studio Art/Graphic Design

Major Options: two-dimensional art, three-dimensional art, graphic design, art education

Field Facts:

- BJU grads are serving all over the world as creative directors and art directors at top firms, the CIA, mission boards, BJU Press and on various mission fields. Many more have started their own businesses or are self-supporting artists.
- "The field of graphic design is a blending of technology and technique that touches all areas of our lives. A designer's influence extends from paintings to packaging, books to websites, and lithographics to cell phone interfaces."—Jonathan Andrews, graphic design faculty

Grad: Jon Blair, B.A. graphic design, '94, BJU
Creative Director, Infor Global Solutions, Atlanta, Ga.; founder of Ignite Design Group

"Stay current with the latest trends by reading art and computer publications, attending design conferences, meeting with others in the design field, and staying current with the latest hardware and software packages. My internship at a local ad agency during my senior year was a huge learning experience for me and solidified my desire for pursuing a career in art."

Faculty Profile
Dr. Randy Jaeggli, chairman, Division of Bible
16 years at BJU
B.S. paper science and engineering, '74, State University of New York College of Environmental Science and Forestry at Syracuse University; M.Div. '82, and Ph.D. Old Testament Interpretation, '87, BJU

Tony Turner, senior practical Christian training major from Schaumburg, Ill.
"I believe God has called me to church planting. Traveling all over the United States, I have seen the need for Bible-believing churches. I would like to be a part of reaching areas of our country that do not have strong, Bible-believing churches.

Future goals: "I plan to attend seminary for advanced Bible training and then go out and plant a church wherever God leads."

Heather Davenport, senior studio art major (two-dimensional) from Greenville, S.C.
"God has given me a talent in art and the desire to develop it. I prayerfully considered other options as a major; but through some godly mentors, God confirmed that He wanted me to study art. I don't know where God will place me, but I would like to continue to use the talent He has given me in illustration and design, maybe in the area of missions."

Faculty Profile
Mr. David Appleman, chairman, Division of Art
39 Years at BJU
B.A. art, '66, and M.A. art, '67, BJU

Field: Bible

Major Options: practical Christian training, Bible evangelism, camp ministries, pastoral studies, youth ministries, Christian missions

Field Facts:
- Nearly 2,500 Bible majors have graduated from BJU
- "The Bible major equips our students to deal with trends, such as the Designer Church and Emergent Church movements. Although culture changes, we teach our students to interpret and apply the unchanging Word of God to constantly changing cultural contexts."—Dr. Randy Jaeggli, Division of Bible chairman

Grad: Derek Harm, B.A. youth ministries, '92, and M.A. theology, '95, BJU
Senior pastor, Faith Baptist Church, Folsom, Calif.
"I never anticipated being a church planter, but God opened the door and pushed me through it. It's the greatest thing to see God do the work. My training at BJU gave me the building blocks I needed for a God-honoring ministry. Current students—be diligent, stay focused and learn all you can while you're there. Then consider coming out West—we're in great need for church planters out this way!"

THE PRESIDENT'S CORNER

BJU's Institutional Goals:
Preparing Students to Excel

For the last two years, the BJU administration has gone through an extensive review of the mission established by the founder 80 years ago and stewarded by the three administrations since his. As we went through that process, we formalized nine institutional goals that are both guideposts for day-to-day emphasis among the students and institutional "rulers" for measuring the degree to which we are accomplishing our primary goal—to inspire regenerated students to know, love and serve Jesus Christ.

A practical outgrowth of that foundational goal is to prepare students to excel intellectually and vocationally by offering diverse academic programs rooted in biblical truth and centered on a liberal arts core. Though scores of college programs across the country also have a liberal arts emphasis, BJU is rare in its combination of both a biblical underpinning and an eagerness for "educating the whole person" through exposure to the liberal arts. This combination flows from our basic presupposition that "all truth is God's truth."

It is our intention to expand the use of students' God-given dispositions, gifts and capacities to further the cause of Christ. Therefore, another of our objectives is to develop in students the cultural breadth and social skills that enhance their lives and also equip them to communicate biblical truth effectively. Each concert, drama, opera, recital and Vespers program is a means to accomplish this end. This cultural exposure benefits our students and graduates and the individuals to whom they minister daily.

Furthermore, BJU instills in students a compelling concern for reaching the unconverted with the saving truth of the Gospel of Christ. Extension ministries and involvement in community projects are all structured for a single purpose: to teach our students to show love for God by emulating His love. There's a declaration periodically made from the chapel pulpit and echoed by the students—"The most sobering reality in the world today is that people are dying and going to Hell today." This statement encapsulates the burden that my great-grandfather had when he founded the school 80 years ago; it summarizes the ongoing emphasis of the administration, faculty and staff today.

We desire that everything we do here be driven by intentionality and burden. We focus on helping students go forth better equipped for the work of the Lord and better able to bring Him glory with their lives than when they first arrived on campus. We do so imperfectly, but our desire is that our God be glorified in, by and through His servants here. —Stephen Jones

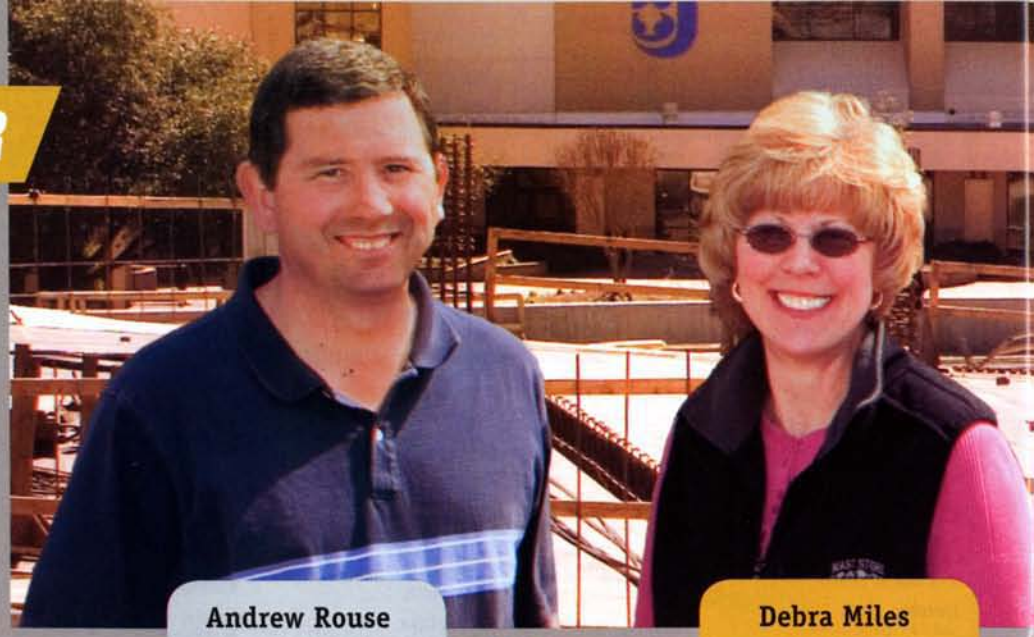
SERVING TOGETHER

With more than 4,000 students, it takes a large staff to keep BJU running—1,380 to be exact. That represents nearly 42,000 hours of work each week! With that many people working side by side for that many hours, it also takes dedication and a spirit of serving to fulfill the mission of BJU—developing Christlike character.



Facilities Management

With 341 trash cans (in just one of BJU's 58 buildings!) and more than 1,665,967 square feet to keep clean and running well, the 540 employees of the Facilities Management team work tirelessly together to serve the thousands of students, faculty, staff and visitors on campus. It takes a lot of work to keep up the impeccable reputation for excellent facilities that has characterized BJU for so many years, but with the spirit of the staff featured here, it's easy to see how this reputation is possible!

Andrew Rouse

Roofing: "I make sure the roofs on campus don't leak. Our roofing department keeps track of nearly 1,000,000 square feet of roofing! Keeping the roofs and ceilings looking nice is important to the school's testimony."

Education: B.A. Bible Education, '81; M.A. Bible, '84; M.Div, '87, BJU
Years at BJU: 26

Ministry/Job
Favorite part of working at BJU: Being in full-time Christian work
Least favorite part of job: Cleaning out wet, messy gutters
Interaction with students: "Over the years my life has been enriched by working with more than 200 students on the roofing crew and with my nursing home ministry."

Family
Wife: Amy; Children: Anastasia (21), Anderson (17), Ambrose (10), Alexander (5)
Originally from Plymouth, N.C.
"Our family tradition is to read The Chronicles of Narnia to each of our children at bedtime."

Personal
Hobbies: Camping/hiking and reading
Church ministries: Sunday school supervisor, custodial, children's church, VBS, nursery
Community involvement: "Each Friday night our family visits retirement homes."
To do: Pastor a small church

Debra Miles

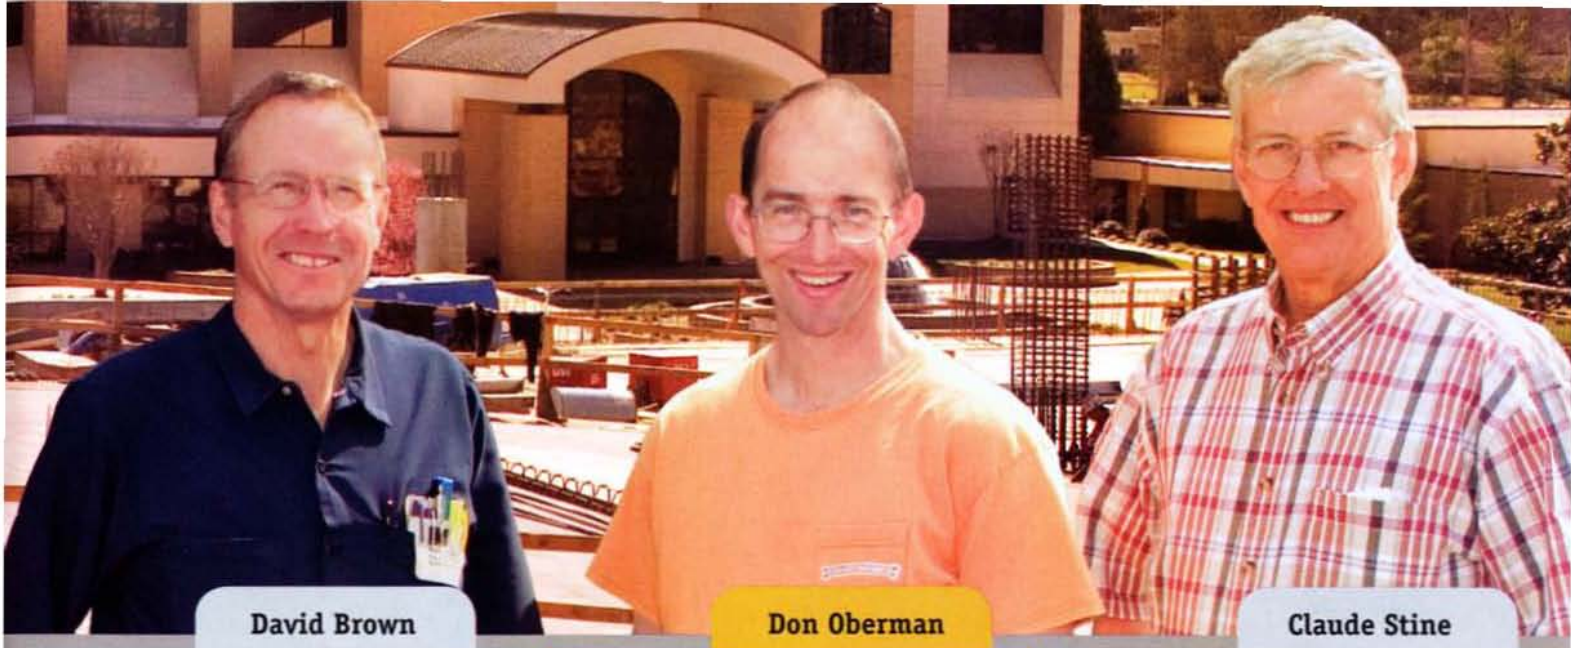
Custodial Supervisor: "I help oversee the nearly 400 students who diligently clean the campus buildings."

Education: Certified Dental Assistant
Years at BJU: 5

Ministry/Job
Favorite part of job: Working with the students!
Interaction with students: "I enjoy encouraging my 'cherubs' to do their best—even at cleaning toilets. I tell them that if they arrange their thoughts correctly and purpose to honor God, they can enjoy even the worst of jobs."
Why do you work at BJU? This is where God has called my husband and me to minister.

Family
Husband: Tim; Children: Lindsey and Tara; two granddaughters
Originally from Silver Lake, Wis.
"Our family enjoys visiting antique shops in quaint little towns."

Personal
Hobbies: Biking, walking, reading
To do: "After we retire, my husband and I would like to travel to different ministries and assist them in building projects."



David Brown

Electrical Supervisor: "Our department oversees and maintains electrical jobs in new construction as well as the high-voltage systems on campus."

Education: B.A. Bible, '68, Friends Bible College
Years at BJU: 38

Ministry/Job
Favorite part of job: The variety
Favorite part of working at BJU: The caring spirit and focused ministry
How does your job contribute to the school's mission—developing Christlike character? "We have a short biblical challenge each morning in our department that encourages each of us."

Family
Wife: Martha; Children: Gerry, Jerry, Marilyn, Joanna, Esther, David, Stephen; 12 grandchildren
Originally from Glendale, Calif.
"Our family makes a yearly trip to visit loved ones in Missouri, Iowa and Nebraska."

To do: "I would like to continue spending time with my family—that is my joy."

CHURCH away from HOME

"Bob Jones University is not a church; we're an educational institution," acknowledges Dr. Bruce McAllister, director of ministerial training and extension ministries. That's why BJU strongly encourages students to become an active part of one of the many local churches in the Greenville area during their college days. Although a Sunday morning service is held on campus, most students attend evening services at local churches, and many students and faculty/staff members also serve in churches on Sunday mornings or the whole day.

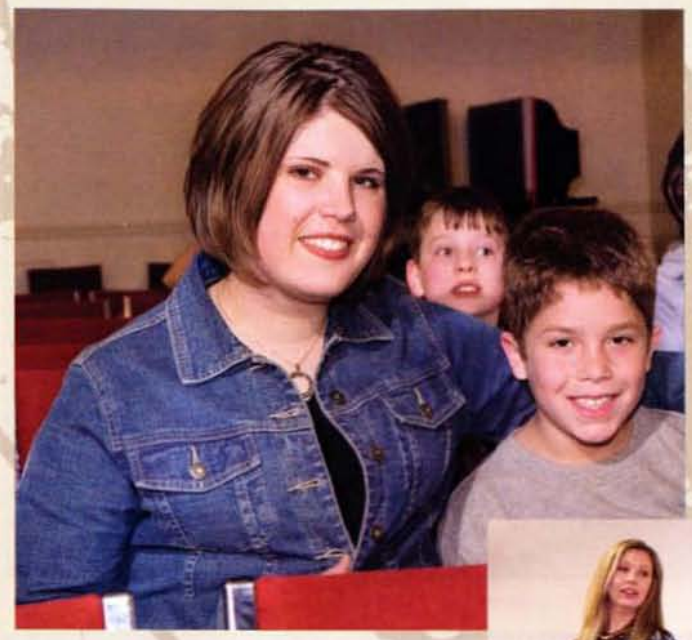
"God's agency for today is the local church, and we expect students to arrange their schedules so they can be habitually present for the services of a local church," Dr. McAllister says. Addresses and service schedules for more than 40 area churches are posted in the residence halls (and at www.bju.edu/about/community/churches), and many of the churches provide bus or van transportation to and from the campus. The Greenville area has more fundamental churches per capita than any other place in America, Dr. McAllister observes. "The opportunities, the preaching, the programs are phenomenal." Students also serve in churches across the state, as well as in North Carolina, Georgia and Tennessee.

BJU institutional goal #8: "To implant in students a commitment to vital involvement in the life and ministry of a biblically faithful local congregation."

For most students, coming to BJU means leaving the comforts of home, including a hometown and a home church. BJU has much to offer in terms of spiritual food and encouragement—Bible classes for every student every semester, daily chapel and residence hall prayer group, relationships with godly teachers and fellow students—but no college can substitute for the role a local church plays in the life of a Christian student.

He encourages new students to visit several churches and then to settle into one for the remainder of their college careers. With so many options, student should be able either to find a church similar to their church back home or benefit from seeing different ways of doing things. By faithfully attending a local church's services, getting to know its people and serving in its ministries, students can have a "home church away from home." Some students even join Greenville-area churches as associate members while retaining their membership in their home churches.

Rebekah Durrill, a senior piano pedagogy major from Huntsville, Ala., chose to become an associate member of Hampton Park Baptist Church at the encouragement of a woman in the church. "I'm a part of this church," Rebekah says. "Even though it's large, I know a lot of people, and it's because I've gotten involved in different ministries." She has sung in the choir, traveled on a singles' summer mission team, and served in the Kids 4 Truth program on Wednesday nights, listening to verses and playing games with the third graders. "Because I go on an extension ministry at the same church I attend, I see the kids twice every week," she points out.



Students who are faithful to a local church benefit from the accountability of having people who expect them to be there and notice when they're not, as well as the benefit of hearing a pastor's systematic preaching through a passage or theme. Rebekah has also found that older church members are encouraged by talking to the students each week.

"As college students, we're very busy, and there are plenty of Sunday and Wednesday nights that just logically I should not go," Rebekah says. "But if you have your priorities right and you're right with God, He's going to make time for you to do what you ought to do."

Local church involvement has also been a big part of the college years for Joe Peterson, an '07 history grad from Egg Harbor City, N.J. Joe's experience has been with a small church. As a sophomore, he started attending Community Bible Church in Holly Springs, about 30 minutes away, when it was newly planted and still meeting in someone's home. Soon, his girlfriend's father, Dr. Lonnie Polson of the speech faculty, became the congregation's pastor.

Over the next couple of years, the church grew and built its own building. During that time, Joe has taught the children's Sunday school class, sung in the choir, led the congregational singing, and invested many hours in Saturday workdays to construct the new building. Church attendance averages 60 people, and Joe appreciates the small size.

"My freshman year, I enjoyed looking for a church and hearing all the great preachers in town, but it's really easy to get lost," he says. But at Community Bible Church, he says, "If you're not there, people know it. When I go home on Christmas break, people miss me and are happy to see me come back. I feel like I have a church home. We're very close."

Although Joe graduated in May, he and Jenny ('06) are still faithfully serving at Community Bible Church and will continue to do so after getting married in June. That's the pattern BJU wants for every student: commitment to a local church during college, transitioning naturally to a lifetime of dedication to whatever local church the Lord leads the student to after graduation.

As Dr. McAllister told students in a recent chapel message, "One of our great goals for you as you go through this training process and go out to serve the Lord is that you would find yourself a servant in your local church—willing to serve behind the scenes and do whatever is needed. If you are going to get from this training base to that opportunity of service in the local church, you cannot ignore the local church during this time. The church is to be a vital avenue of both blessing and service for us all during these days." ■

HelpWanted

When BJU employees tell someone that they work at Bob Jones University, they are often asked, "What do you teach?" More often than not, the answer is, "I don't teach!" Although BJU is an educational institution employing hundreds of faculty members, its operation also depends on hundreds more staff members for whom working at BJU does not equal delivering lectures and grading papers. Instead, their job activities include writing brochures, designing books, taking photos, baking bread, planning menus, sewing costumes, running electrical wire, repairing plumbing, programming computers, answering phones, planning events, dry-cleaning clothes, filing records or crunching numbers—to name a few.

BJU is always looking for highly qualified, servant-hearted people who want to invest their skills and experience in a rewarding ministry. Perhaps you have been in secular employment for a few years but are sensing that God may want a change for you, or maybe you are considering early retirement. If you are interested in devoting yourself to helping Christian young people prepare for a life of service, consider how God could use you at BJU. Besides the obvious benefits of being in the BJU environment with godly coworkers, chapel, a full calendar of special events and opportunities for continuing education, the advantages of residing in Greenville include a low cost of living, a pleasant climate and an abundance of good churches.

Nearly all positions at BJU are full-time and year-round. Some of the areas with current opportunities are listed to the right, but other openings exist as well. If you think God may be calling you to consider employment at BJU, contact the Human Resources staffing coordinator at 864-242-5100, ext. 3006, or e-mail cshultz@bju.edu.

Campus Construction Update

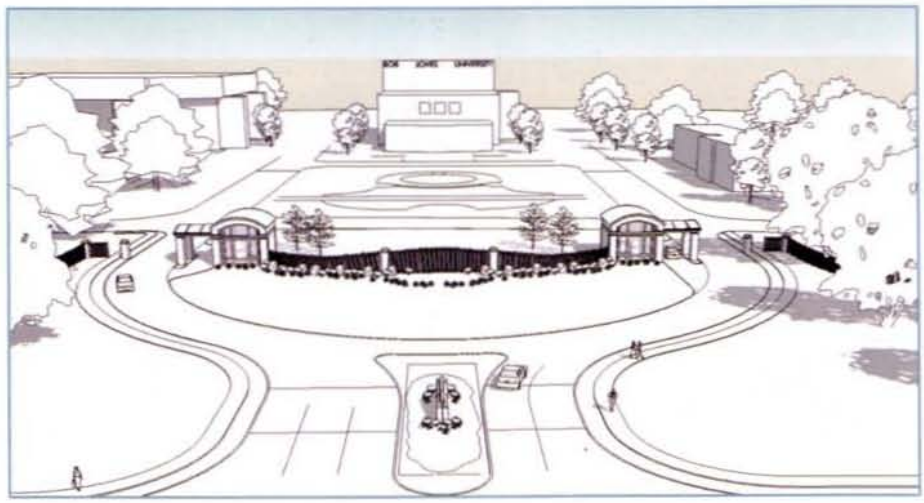
PARKING GARAGE

Cars, cars everywhere and not a spot to park. That frustration will soon be alleviated on the BJU campus, as the construction of the new four-deck, 405-space parking garage behind Rodeheaver Auditorium progresses steadily in anticipation of the mid-August opening. The 150,274 square-foot structure will help ease the parking crunch on campus, especially during busy times such as Bible Conference and Living Gallery.

WELCOME CENTER

The second major campus construction project this summer is a new Welcome Center that will replace the center built in 1965 (see photo on p. 13), provide a more attractive entrance for guests, and give a broad view of the front campus to the nearly 30,000 people who drive by each day.



Set back from Wade Hampton Boulevard and consisting of separate structures for entry and exit, the new Welcome Center will create a safer entry onto the campus. The project will also include an additional exit lane, a BJU identification sign, extensive landscaping and improved technology for security.

The 2007 Bible Conference offering of $483,506 went toward the new Welcome Center. Maureen Frigo of Kokomo, Ind., gave the first gift toward the offering last year in memory of her son, Army Pfc. Nathan Joseph Frigo, who gave his life for his country when he was killed by a roadside bomb in Iraq in October 2006.

COFFEE SHOP

Taking a coffee break between classes or library study sessions will be more convenient at the coffee shop being built this summer on the west side of the campus, near the Alumni Building, seminary and library. The coffee shop, "Cuppa Jones," will have outdoor seating areas and wireless access to the campus network for those who want to pull out their laptops while enjoying a cup of coffee.
